Watercolor Paints

There are two main types of watercolor paints: tube paints and pan paints. Tube paints come in a tube and are typically more pigmented than pan paints. Pan paints come in a small, round container and are less pigmented than tube paints. Both types of paints can be used to create beautiful paintings, so it is up to you to decide which type you prefer.

Watercolor Brushes

There are a wide variety of watercolor brushes available, each with its own unique shape and size. The most common types of watercolor brushes are round brushes, flat brushes, and filbert brushes. Round brushes are good for creating thin lines and details, while flat brushes are good for creating washes and filling in large areas. Filbert brushes are a combination of round and flat brushes, and they can be used for a variety of tasks.

Watercolor Paper

Watercolor paper is specially designed to absorb water and paint. It is important to use watercolor paper when painting with watercolors, as other types of paper will not absorb the paint properly.

Gradients

A gradient is a gradual transition from one color to another. Gradients can be used to create a variety of effects, from realistic skies to abstract backgrounds. To create a gradient, simply mix two or more colors together and then apply the paint to the paper in a smooth, even layer.

Glazing

Glazing is a technique that involves applying thin layers of paint over each other. Glazing can be used to create a variety of effects, from subtle color changes to rich and vibrant colors. To glaze, simply apply a thin layer of paint to the paper and let it dry. Then, apply another thin layer of paint over the first layer.
