What to Do If He Likes You

If you've realized that a guy likes you, congratulations! You're in a great position. Now you have to decide what you want to do about it.

Here are a few things to consider:

- Are you interested in him? If you're not interested in him, it's best to let him down gently. You don't want to lead him on or hurt his feelings.
- If you are interested in him, how do you feel about taking things to the next level? Are you ready to start dating him or do you want to take things slow?
- Talk to him about your feelings. Once you've figured out how you feel, talk to the guy about your feelings. Let him know that you like him and that you're interested in getting to know him better.

How to Handle Rejection

Not every guy you like will like you back. That's just the reality of dating. If a guy doesn't like you, it's important to handle rejection gracefully.

Here are a few tips:

- Don't take it personally. Rejection is not a reflection of your worth. It simply means that the guy you're interested in isn't interested in you.
- Be respectful. Even if you're disappointed, be respectful of the guy's decision. Don't try to pressure him to change his mind.
- Move on. Rejection hurts, but it's important to move on. Don't dwell on the past. There are plenty of other fish in the sea.

Figuring out if a guy likes you can be tricky, but it's not impossible. By paying attention to his signals and his behavior, you can get a good idea of how he feels about you. If you're interested in him, don't be afraid to make the first move. And if he doesn't like you back, don't take it personally. Just handle rejection gracefully and move on.
