What is Logical Reasoning?

Logical reasoning is the ability to understand and analyze arguments. It is a skill that is essential for success in law school and in the legal profession.

Arguments are made up of premises and conclusions. The premises are the reasons that are given to support the conclusion. The conclusion is the claim that is being made.

In Free Download to evaluate an argument, you need to be able to identify the premises and the . You also need to be able to determine whether the premises support the .

There are many different types of arguments. Some of the most common types of arguments include:

* Deductive arguments * Inductive arguments * Analogical arguments * Enthymemes

Deductive arguments are arguments in which the premises logically guarantee the . If the premises are true, then the must also be true.

Inductive arguments are arguments in which the premises provide evidence for the . The premises do not logically guarantee the , but they make it more likely that the is true.

Analogical arguments are arguments in which the premises compare two things. The premises argue that the two things are similar in some way and that, therefore, they are also similar in another way.

Enthymemes are arguments in which one or more of the premises is unstated. The unstated premise is usually something that is commonly believed or that is obvious from the context of the argument.
